Asbestos Bankruptcy Claims - Billions of dollars are now available from Asbestos Trusts for your clients.

When most people hear that a company is going bankrupt, they think liquidation of assets, massive layoffs, and shutting down the business. With asbestos bankruptcies this is the very rare exception. Billions of dollars are still available from these companies (or their insurance) for victims of asbestos disease. Most "bankrupt" asbestos companies, especially the larger corporations, remain very competitive within their industries during bankruptcy, and often flourish afterwards. This is because an asbestos bankruptcy is a reorganization authorized under Chapter 11 of the bankruptcy code, not a liquidation that occurs under Chapter 7. For the company, ongoing and future litigation is stopped, liability is consolidated, and the company is protected and all of its subsidiaries are protected from future liability. This is a "relatively" smooth and equitable way for a company to assist the families of workers and others injured or killed by asbestos. Thankfully, many of these "bankrupt companies" still have assets (or insurance proceeds) which are available to victims of asbestos disease. These monies are often placed into a Trust which is accessible to qualifying victims of asbestos disease. Understanding and filing Asbestos Trust Fund claims can add millions in recoveries for your firm and your clients.
